Meeting the challenges of Agriculture and Forestry with Commissioner Bob Odom

Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Bob Odom confirmed today that a second horse in Vermilion Parish has tested positive for West Nile virus.

This is the fourth known case of West Nile virus in the state. The first case was diagnosed in a dead blue jay found near Kenner in Jefferson Parish. The second case was discovered two weeks ago in a horse in Vermilion Parish, and the third case was a crow found in Metairie.

The virus appears to be spreading rapidly throughout the South. Within the past five days, three more southern states have confirmed their first known cases of West Nile virus.

According to the Odom, the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry is waiting for results on an additional four horses that have been tested for West Nile virus. Two of the horses are in Vermilion Parish, one is in Iberia Parish and the other is in Evangeline Parish.

"We are continuing our efforts to inform horse owners that West Nile virus is here in the state, and the only way they can protect their horses is by vaccinating," Odom said.

Earlier this month, some horse owners complained that there was not enough vaccine available, or their veterinarian had run out. Odom encouraged the state's horse owners to be patient.

"Although this is a very serious disease and we do not take it lightly, it's not necessary to panic if you cannot get the vaccine tomorrow. Remain patient and have your horse vaccinated as soon as the vaccine is available," Odom explained.

"Unfortunately I can't just snap my fingers and make it get here now, but the manufacturer says they will have more of the vaccine available soon."

State Veterinarian Dr. Maxwell Lea said high demand and current conditions for air shipping play a big role in vaccine availability.

"After the tragedies in New York and Washington, D.C., last week, the nation's shipping companies are backlogged with deliveries so we can't expect the vaccine to get here immediately," Lea noted.

"Just since last Friday, Tennessee, Mississippi and North Carolina have all confirmed their first cases of West Nile virus, causing demand for the vaccine to increase tremendously," he added, mentioning that first-time cases of West Nile virus have also been confirmed in Indiana, Ohio, Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky and Florida during the summer of 2001.

West Nile virus causes encephalitis, or swelling of the brain, in both horses and humans, but cannot be transmitted directly from horses or humans to other horses and humans. The virus is transmitted by mosquitoes in two ways, either from bird to bird or from bird to mammal.

Symptoms of West Nile virus in horses include lethargy, high temperature, head pressing and finally, the inability to stand or walk. Lea said the disease is fatal in about 30 percent of the horses that contract it.

Glenda Schoeffler of Lafayette displays art-work created by her father William Schoeffler. The elder Schoeffler has collected more than 4,000 Cattle brands of Cajun Cowboys dating to 1737. He began his collection in the 1970's while tracking land deeds for his business. With the encouragement and blessing of the Louisiana Department of Agriculture & Forestry's Livestock Brand Commission, Glenda and her father are laying the groundwork for a museum to portray the historical and cultural significance of Louisiana cattle brands.

Acadian Cowboys Documented

In an era of high tech security devices, cattle brands are definitely a low-tech item.

The distinctive mark of ownership for livestock is something folks outside the cattle industry give little thought to anymore. In their day, however, when virtually everyone was tied to the land, cattle brands were like modern-day car insurance, a family without one was a family exposed to considerable financial risk.

During certain periods livestock brands weren't optional they were the law. When Spain ruled Louisiana in the 1700s, anyone with five or more animals was required to appear before a government magistrate and register not only his family members but also his livestock brand.

Enter William Schoeffler of Lafayette. Since the 1970s, Schoeffler has been pouring over musty courthouse records looking for land deeds as part of his business. Invariably included among successions and other family legal documents were cattle brands.

As Schoeffler's daughter,

Glenda, tells it, cattle brands are their own art form. Although her father holds 27 oil-field related patents and his living is made in other things, the artistic lines and swirls of a brand appealed to the senior Schoeffler. He began recording them and over the years has amassed more than 4,000 brands of southwest Louisiana cowboys. They date from as far back as that of Barthelemy Grevemberg in 1737, and include all those through the end of the 1800s.

After "Le Grand Derangement," the Acadian dispersal from Canadian Nova Scotia in the 1760s, the number of brands exploded. Cajun cowboy names compiled by Schoeffler include everyone from the Arceneauxs, Aucoins, Bouttes, Babins and Broussards to the Valots, Verrets, Viators, Zeringues and Zenons.

According to Doris B. Bentley, Ph.D., retired faculty of the University of Southwestern Louisiana, historically, "Southwest Louisiana, particularly the prairie area between Opelousas and Lake Charles, was dotted with cattle and known as the 'Meadowland of America' in the very early 1800s. I can remember when the blue-front store in Scott had a sign which read, 'Scott, Here the West Begins.' The cattle drives first appeared in Southwest Louisiana – a fact little known by many adults today."

What was once only a collection of curiosities has, in the intervening years, become a passion for the Schoefflers. Glenda recently brought that passion to the Louisiana Livestock Brand Commission, the agency within the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry, which has published a 200-page book of registered livestock brands every four years since 1946.

With the encouragement and blessing of the Brand Commission, Glenda and her father are laying the groundwork for a museum to portray the historical and cultural significance of Louisiana cattle brands.

Glenda Schoeffler envisions her museum portraying a family's history of its own personal genealogy. "Back when the Spanish ruled Louisiana," she says, "my grandfather was a cattle brand collector." (cont'd on p.7) siana, the authorities required everyone to register at a central location. If you had five or more cows they had to be branded. If they weren't branded you had no claim to them. Anybody could claim them.

"The brand was also a family's mark. They considered it a family crest. The family was known by the design," she says.

Although no location has been secured yet, Schoeffler sees within the museum a blacksmith recreating the actual iron brands of families for display.

To help fund the museum, individual families will make financial donations to have their brands exhibited along with portraits, photographs, histories and genealogical records.

As part of an effort to generate public recognition and acceptance, William Schoeffler has designed more than 180 prints of Cajun family groupings encompassing 2,354 families. For example, the 26 Cormier families uncovered in Schoeffler's research through the end of the 1800s are included on a single print with each family's individual brand and date of registration.

Each print is illustrated with pen and ink drawings of parents, children and scenes of Acadian life: livestock, landscapes, houses, churches, farming, logging, cane grinding, crawfishing, haying, horse-drawn buggies, pirogues, swamps, and other events in rural and historic Acadiana.

One of Schoeffler's prints is of his own lineage, the Bourques, which includes 20 Bourque families and their brands from 1778 to 1872. Other prints include related family surnames. Three other prints are of Free Persons of Color, including 73 surnames from 1748 through 1896.

The prints have been compiled in a book and are available as posters, greeting cards and postcards. For more information the Schoefflers can be contacted at 223 Morningside Drive, Duson, LA 70529. Phone: 337-873-7419.

As the Schoefflers say in their literature, "This is our tribute to the hardworking ancestors who struggled to make the Southwest prairies of Louisiana their own. Each brand is a tangible link, a visible mark of their toil."
